When Ben Affleck isn't serving as comedic fodder for "Sad Affleck" memes, he's getting roasted by his own kids. On Sunday, when the two-time Oscar winner accepted his humanitarian award at the Starkey Hearing Foundation Gala in St. Paul, Minnesota, he noted that one family member in particular was entirely unimpressed with his accolade.

"When I told my oldest daughter that I was getting this award, she said, 'Yeah, Dad. Mom already has that one,'" Affleck said.

Affleck was being honored for his longtime work with the Eastern Congo Initiative, which he created with business partner Whitney Williams in 2010.

"Every time I visit, I leave even more inspired there will be a brighter and more peaceful future for the Congolese," Affleck wrote on Instagram. "The challenges are real, and the road is long, but the Congolese are the hardest working and most hopeful people I know. We often speak of heroes — I count these among the many. It's the honor of a lifetime to support Congo. My heart will forever be there with them."
